Marie Parsons, A Creation Story (or How One Novel Came to Be)
Tuesday, April 10, 6:30 PM

Every novel has its own unique story of how it came to be. Marie Parson’s book, The Devil's Back (call # F Pars) is, indeed, an “accidental” novel. The author never planned to write anything creative until several years after her retirement; and even when she began to write, it was only one short story at a time every month or so. There was no deadline and no ambitious plan to write a novel. When the stories were about two-thirds written, Parsons realized that she had the makings of a novel and then began writing with the goal of creating one. Come hear the author trace the highs and lows in the development of The Devil's Back (which, by the way, is not a glorification of the Devil, but a story set in eastern Kentucky about the May-December marriage of Adam and Laurey (Castle) Moore). She will also read selected passages from the novel.

One November morning, a chatty young couple with two chatty young daughters move in next door and accidentally flatten Ove’s mailbox. What ensues is a comical and heartwarming tale of unkept cats, unexpected friendship, and the ancient art of backing up a U-Haul. All of which will change one cranky old man and a local residents’ association to their very foundations.
